

THE NEWEST CIVIL RIGHT

The RIGHT TO MIRANDA WARNINGS

Until June 26, 2000, a person who was in custody and being subjected to police interrogation did not have a "Civil Right" to be given Miranda warnings.

Miranda warnings were just the mechanism by which a state or Federal law enforcement officer ensured that the subject of his custodial interrogation knew what his or her rights were before the interrogation began. If a law enforcement officer conducted a custodial interview without first giving Miranda warnings, it was not a Constitutional violation, and so the worst that could happen was the suppression of the improperly obtained statement.

Today, because a person in custody has a "Civil Right" to be given his Miranda rights, is it possible, even likely, that failure to give a subject Miranda rights will serve as the basis for a Bivens or Title 42, United States Code, Section 1983 civil rights claim.

The Miranda Warning

The Constitution reserves many rights for those suspected of crime. One of the fears of the Framers was that the government could act however it wished by simply saying an individual was a suspected criminal. Many of the rights in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, such as habeas corpus, the right to remain silent, the right to an attorney, and search warrants, are designed to ensure that those accused of a crime are assured of those rights.

Police were able to take advantage of the fact that not everyone knows their rights by heart.

In fact, it is likely that most citizens could name a few of their rights as accused criminals, but not all of them. The police's position was that if the accused, for example, spoke about a crime without knowing that they did not need to, that it was the person's fault for not invoking that right, even if they did not know, or did not remember, that they had that right.

This was the crux of the issue in Miranda v Arizona.

This brochure is YOUR WARNING to KNOW and BE READY to STAND UP FOR YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

What is a Miranda warning?

A Miranda warning advises people of their constitutional right not to answer questions or to have an attorney present before answering any questions.

Must a police officer always advise a person of their Miranda rights before asking a question?

No. The Miranda warning is only in effect during a "custodial interrogation." This means that the person being questioned is in custody or in an environment in which the person does not believe that he is free to leave.

Ohhh, so that's why the "Street Wise Punk" always asks "Am I under arrest?" And the cop says "No". Then the Street Punk says "Go screw yourself copper. I ain't talking to you!"

We need to be "Street Smart" too, because these monsters are destroying us in our polite and NAIVE INNOCENCE!

"Taking the 5th" is NOT just for courtroom drama TV!
Nor is it just for slime balls appearing before Congressional Hearings...
IT IS FOR YOU!

Don't forget to DEMAND a Search Warrant if they want to "look around" in your HOME!

End the War Against America's Families!

American Family Rights Association, in conjunction with its members, declares hostilities against the entities commonly called Child Protective Services (CPS), and all colluding actors, agencies, bureaucracies and Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO).

The "Declaration of Hostilities against CPS" is a formal enumeration of the CRIMES that the "child protection industry" is DELIBERATELY committing against America's families.

The CHILDREN are being DESTROYED by this corrupt system under the guise of "best interest of the child". Parents are victimized by deliberate CPS character assassination.

We have been FALSELY ACCUSED, and PROSECUTED for PRETENDED offenses- as a DIRECT RESULT of our politeness, civility, respect for "authority", our naive innocence and NOT KNOWING our CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

American Family Rights Association is educating the public of their CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS and Miranda Rights to STAND UP to those who are ABUSING their government authority under the Color of Law to "invite themselves in" to the family.

this is america on freedom!
